What Makes McElroy Metal Different?

Homeowners who need to replace their roof are faced with a vast array of roofing materials, styles, and vendors to work with. From small local businesses to national chains, it is essential that you find the right partner to work with you throughout your new roof journey. The right roofing partner can help you navigate the world of roofing to find the right roofing solution for your needs.

With so many companies giving advice and guidance on roofing issues, it can be challenging to know who to trust. At McElroy Metal our interest is in helping homeowners find the best long-term roofing solution available, but we know that homeowners have many options available to them.

To help you navigate all of the roofing partners available to you we've identified some of the most important criteria in selecting a roofing partner, the questions you can ask to narrow down your search, and the ways that McElroy Metal is different.

The Importance of Expertise and Experience

Whether you are retrofitting your existing roof or completely removing and replacing it, it is vital that you select a roofing partner that has the experience and expertise to help you choose a new roof and install it.

Expertise and experience are the most important factors to consider when selecting a roofing partner.

Consider this: How often are you willing to replace your roof? How often are you willing to repair your roof? How much time and money are you willing to spend to keep your roofing looking good and functioning properly?

If you work with a roofing partner that doesn't have the experience and expertise to not only help you select the right roofing system to meet your needs but also install it correctly you could be faced with years of costly repairs and maintenance and a roof that you will have to replace sooner than you would have liked.

A properly installed metal roof, for instance, will continue to look great while protecting your home from wind, hail, and fire for many decades with little to no maintenance or repairs.

Some questions you can ask when evaluating roofing partners include:

- How long have you been installing metal roofs?
- What different types of metal systems have you installed?
- Which system is preferred and why?
